“Something compelling, something true, although I didn’t know when, I always knew....” That’s how Tina Steinberg describes her journey to discovering her passion for creating intuitively inspired jewelry art. She took the traditional route to get there: college, graduate and post-graduate school to study psychology and social work. It brought her beloved husband to her and she met many inspiring people along the way. “To help people in such an intimate capacity was a gift. I heard many difficult stories, but they were all stories of courage, hope, peace and love.” Her Spirit Collection is based on these themes.

Transitioning to a stay at home mom, Tina’s art broke through unplanned and unbridled. As it unfolded naturally, she knew this is what she unknowingly had been waiting for. “It’s one of my truest life experiences. I’ve nurtured this from a very deep part of me with no training, no mentors. I’m extremely proud and protective of what I create. This is essentially another child to me.” Tina creates every aspect of her business with intuitively driven thoughtfulness and she weaves her own poetry into some of her designs. She relishes in her growing success as a self-directed artpreneur, but is quick to say that her amazing family, friends, customers and life experiences bring it together in a way that can’t be directed.

Tina has a very strong, loyal customer base and enjoys meeting as many of them as she can. She recently visited Canada and the Pacific Northwest to meet requests for private group appointments. As one might suspect, everyone found something they instantly connected to, some shared their stories and Tina returned home with inspiration that could not have been planned. That’s how her story goes, how her art grows.
